REPUBLICAN MANAGERS ARE CONFIDENT HUGHES HAS WON

Presidential Aspirants are Running a Close Race in the West.

WILSON SWING SEEMS CHECKED

Later Reports Indicate States Entered in Doubtful Column Have Gone for Hughes; Chairman McCormick Still Asserts that Wilson is the Victor.

By Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—After receiving the latest returns from party leaders in doubtful states in the Middle West and West today, Alvin T. Hert, manager of Republican headquarters, claimed that Hughes had carried Indiana, North Dakota, California and Minnesota, and the Republican national ticket had won with at least 272 electoral votes, or 6 more than the required number.

"I am certain that Hughes and Fairbanks have won, although the results appear to be close," said Mr. Hert.

"I talked by telephone with Chester H. Rowell, Republican state chairman of California this morning, and he said he had received returns from every county in the state and that Hughes had won in California by about 10,000."

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Chester H. Rowell, chairman of the Republican state central committee of California, informed Chairman Willcox of the Republican National Committee in New York that Hughes will carry California by 68,000. This was in answer to Willcox's declaration that "California is now the pivotal state."

WILLCOX CONFIDENT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8. — Chairman Willcox of the Republican national committee at 12:50 issued this statement:

"California and Minnesota are surely for Hughes. This means Hughes is elected."

The statement, he said, was based on advices from the respective state headquarters claiming California by 10,000 and Monnesota by 20,000. Chester H. Rowell telegraphed from San Francisco that the Republicans could concede everything that the Democrats claimed and still carry the state by 6,000.

McCORMICK CONFIDENT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Early this forenoon Chairman McCormick of the Democratic national committee gave out the following list of states with the electoral vote, a total of 312 which he claimed for the President: Alabama 12, Arizona 3, Arkansas 5, California 13, Colorado 6, Delaware 3, Florida 6, Georgia 14, Idaho 4, Indiana 15, Kentucky 13, Louisiana 10; Maryland 8, Minnesota 12, Mississippi 10, Missouri 18, Montana 4, Nebraska 8, Nevada 3, New Hampshire 4, New Mexico 3, North Carolina 12, Ohio 24, Oklahoma 10, South Carolina 9, Tennessee 12, Texas 20, Utah 4, Virginia 12, Washington 7, West Virginia 8, Wisconsin 13, and Wyoming 3.

Chairman McCormick at 11 o'clock claimed Wilson is elected with 288 electoral votes.

"I am basing my conclusions on the official canvass of pivotal states," he added. "It is a sweeping victory."

Mr. McCormick claimed Kansas with 10 and Ohio with 24 electoral votes. He claimed "the solid south" with 149, Arizona 3, California 13, Colorado 6, Idaho 4, Maryland 8, Missouri 18, Minnesota 12, Montana 4, North Dakota 5, Nebraska 8, Nevada 3, New Hampshire 4, New Mexico 3, Utah 4, Washington 7, and Wyoming 3. Total 288.

"Delaware, South Dakota and Indiana are not included in this list," he said. "The chances, however, are better than ever to get two of these states." Mr. McCormick declined to say which two he had in mind.

McCormick said early this afternoon:

"When the count is finished Wilson will have more than 300 electoral votes."

He added that his advices were that West Virginia had gone Democratic by 10,000.

RESULT IN DOUBT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—The result of the election still was officially in doubt early today, with a decided drift toward the re-election of President Wilson. Upon a dozen doubtful states from which the returns are slowly coming depends whether Mr. Wilson has been re-elected, or whether the next President of the United States will be Charles Evans Hughes.

The actual returns, considering definite and indicated figures, gave President Wilson 232 votes and Mr. Hughes 215. On the votes of California, Delaware, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming, the decisive result of the presidential contest turned.

There seems to be no doubt that President Wilson had safely carried Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah and Virginia.

In the Hughes column were counted Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Wisconsin and Delaware.

From the doubtful states the returns continued to point first toward one candidate and then toward the other, but toward morning there was noticed a steady drift toward President Wilson.

WILSON IN MONTANA.

HELENA, Mont., Nov. 8.—Returns early today indicated victory for President Wilson in Montana by 10,000, the re-election of United States Senator Henry L. Meyers over Charles N. H. Ray, Republican, by about 10,000 and the re-election of Governor Sam P. Stewart, Democrat, over Frank J. Edwards, Republican, by 2,500 to 5,000. Congressman John Evans has been re-elected.

CALIFORNIA IS CLOSE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Returns available early today indicated that the contest between Wilson and Hughes in California was so close that an official count might be necessary to determine the result. With 2152 precincts in various parts of the state out of a total of 5317 accounted for, the President was leading by about 700 votes. Owing to the exceptional length of the ballot, few precincts have been reported in either San Francisco or Los Angeles, and on the result of the count in those two cities depends the outcome. In San Francisco the city chairman estimated that Wilson would have a majority of 20,000. Whether this would overcome the majority certain to be rolled up for Hughes in the southern California city was the point with which election experts concerned themselves.

HUGHES IS TRAILING.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 8.—One hundred 31 precincts out of 204 in Hennepin county, (Minneapolis), give Wilson 26,242; Hughes 18,402. One hundred thirty-seven precincts in Ramsay county, (St. Paul), out of 148 districts gives Wilson 20,533; Hughes 12,333.

MISSOURI FOR PRESIDENT.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 8.—Returns from 2476 out of 3459 precincts in Missouri including all but four in St. Louis give Wilson 268,973; Hughes 254,304. With four precincts missing in St. Louis the city gave Hughes a plurality of 9,922, believed insufficient to overcome Wilson's plurality out in the state.

CLOSE VOTE IN WASHINGTON.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 8.—President Wilson appeared early today to have carried Washington by more than 10,000. Senator Poindexter, Republican, may have 50,000 majority over Turner, Democrat, for senator. Governor Lister, Democrat, maintains his lead over McBride, Republican, his majority in one third of the state being 1,700.

WILSON GAINS SLIGHTLY.

FARGO, N. D., Nov. 8.—President Wilson's lead over Charles E. Hughes in North Dakota increased slightly early today when additional reports on yesterday's election were received from the rural districts. It was the county precincts that turned the tide.

OREGON IN DOUBT.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 8.—Oregon was still in the doubtful column shortly before daybreak today with President Wilson maintaining a 400 lead on the face of incomplete returns from 30 out of 34 counties. Republican leaders claimed that sections yet unheard from were strong Hughes centers and would swing the state.

HUGHES AHEAD IN WEST VA.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 8.—With less than half the precincts of the state heard from today the result of the Presidential contest in West Virginia is by no means decisive, Mr. Hughes having a lead of but 2,563 votes over President Wilson in the 720 districts returned out of 1,713 in the state.

For Governor Cornwell, Democrat, is leading Robinson, Republican, by 311 votes, with but 711 precincts heard from. The United States senatorship vote shows Sutherland, Republican, leading Chilton, Democrat, by 4,058

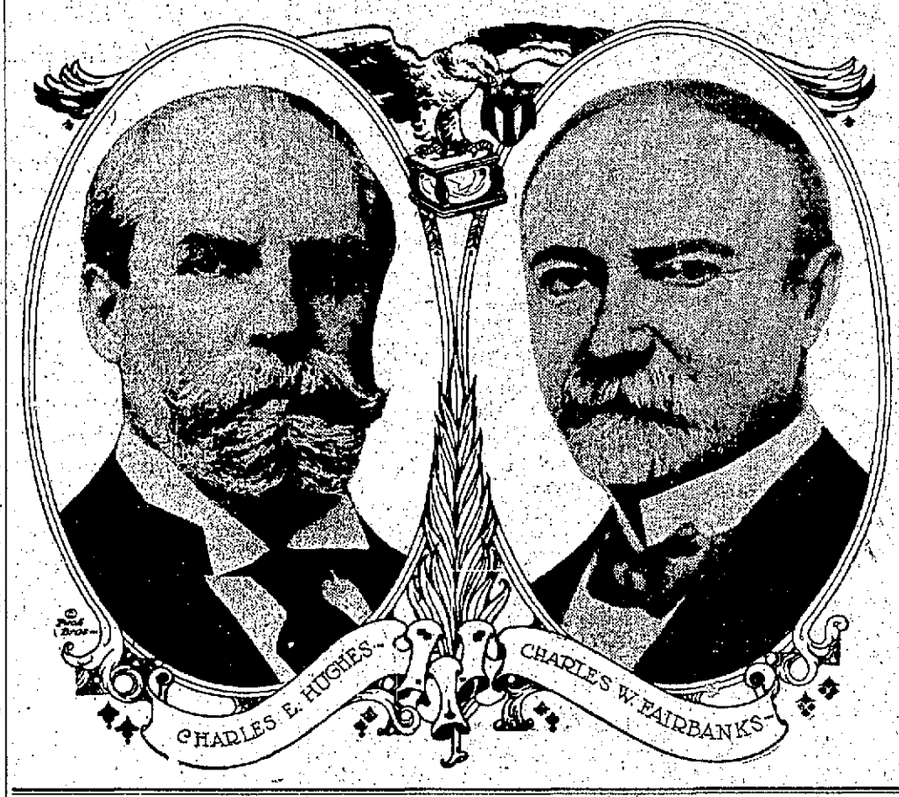
HUGHES AND FAIRBANKS STILL IN THE RING.



COURIER ELECTION SERVICE THE BEST TOWN EVER HAD

Bulletins are Flashed on Screen Before Thousands of People.

INTEREST KEEN TO THE FINISH

Continuous Telephone Service is Given Its First Trial and Proves Its Worth; Longest News Report Ever Received Here Tells Outcome.

The Courier last night gave Connellsville the best election return service in the history of Connellsville. Despite the fact that troubles which developed in the projecting machine made it necessary to discontinue the screen service shortly before midnight, no returns after that hour changed the general situation.

The Associated Press report was exceptionally good. This splendidly organized news service never did better than yesterday in gathering the returns, and The Courier received the full report. For the first time, continuous telephone service supplanted the telegraph, and the consequence was that The Courier was able to receive at least double the amount of matter that would have come over a single wire. Beginning at 7 o'clock the returns were read from the Pittsburg office of the Associated Press without a break until 2 A. M. Equipped with a head-set, the receiver in The Courier office took the bulletins direct by typewriter as they were read. Despite the fact that the Associated Press was carrying election returns on several of its main circuits into Pittsburg, The Courier was at all times up to the minute in getting all of it. As a matter of fact, the telephone receivers could take the matter faster than it came over the many telegraph wires.

As rapidly as the returns were received the important ones were flashed on the screen. When the New York Democratic newspapers began conceding the election of Hughes there was a great demonstration on the part of the hundreds of Republican enthusiasts.

The projection machine was operated by Louis Scolnick, the photographer, who kindly provided the apparatus. James M. Driscoll, assistant circulation manager of The Courier, was in charge of the bulletin service. West Penn officials not only provided a room from which the returns might be shown, but were particularly courteous in assisting in the electrical end. The screen was suspended in front of the Frisbee Building, for which The Courier is indebted to that family.

After the bulletin service was discontinued a hundred or more enthusiasts visited The Courier office to read later news, and it was 2.30 when the staff finally called it "30" for the night.

In addition to the returns flashed on the Main street screen, The Courier's bulletins were also flashed by Manager C. A. Wagner at the Paramount Theatre.

WOMEN INTERESTED.

That women were keenly interested in the result of the Presidential election was evidenced by the fact that a majority of the telephone calls to The Courier for election results came in female voices. The explanation of this may be that most of the men were down town watching the bulletin boards while their sisters, wives and mothers stayed at home and depended upon the telephones for their information.

Some of the women seemed pleased at the trend for Hughes; others were disappointed. Many of them called in several times and it was not until midnight that the wires ceased to bring inquiries from the women. Not a few called today for more definite returns.

When told that Hughes was leading one woman remarked fervently:

"I wish, I hope and I pray that Hughes will be elected."

"So do I," responded the man at the other end of the wire.

Additional Bell telephones which had been installed were of particular service to the inquiring public, making prompt connections possible at all times, even when the rush of calls was greatest. The telephone girls of both the Bell and Tri-State exchanges were exceptionally courteous, despite the additional burdens imposed upon them, and to them is entitled a share of the credit for giving Connellsville and Fayette county inquirers such splendid service.

FAYETTE GIVES A GOOD PLURALITY TO REPUBLICANS

Sterling Only Democrat Who is in Lead and He May Win.

CLAIMS DISTRICT BY 1,000

104 of the 105 Districts in This County Give Him a Lead of 1380 Over Hopwood, and He Claims Greene County by 1770; Knox and Kephart Do Well.

Fayette county will return a plurality of approximately 1,000 for Charles Evans Hughes, and will do better than that for the other Republicans on the ticket, with the exception of Robert F. Hopwood for Congress. Hopwood is running about 1400 behind Sterling in the districts from which the vote has been received. Sterling claims his election in the district by 1,000.

Because of the length of the ballot the election boards in many districts were very late in making their returns. Up to noon the following figures were tabulated:

56 OUT OF 105 DISTRICTS.

Wilson	5,596
Hughes	6,126

104 OUT OF 105 DISTRICTS.

Orvis	4,914
Knox	5,832
Cramer	5,037
Kephart	5,967

67 OUT OF 105 DISTRICTS.

Sterling	10,645
Hopwood	9,265

There is no doubt as to the election of Hess over Rhodes for Assembly in the First District, the Republican having a good vote. In the Second District, Duncan Sinclair, Leo Smith and D. Harry Horton have been elected to the Assembly over their Democratic opponents, Harry Cochran, Reuben Howard and J. Espey Sherrard.

At noon 46 of the 57 districts in Somerset gave Hopwood 4,534, Sterling 2,428. It was predicted that Hopwood would carry the county by from 2,100 to 2,200 votes.

With only one district missing, North Union No. 5, which is conceded to be a Sterling precinct, the Barefoot Boy has a plurality of 1,380 over Hopwood. This makes Sterling's election virtually certain.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—Philander C. Knox, Republican, was yesterday elected to the United States Senate from Pennsylvania by a large plurality over Judge Ellis L. Orvis, Democrat, of Bellefonte.

Pennsylvania yesterday rolled up an old-time Republican majority when Charles E. Hughes, Republican nominee for President, carried the state by a plurality not below 200,000, according to the best estimates. More complete returns may swell this figure to 300,000.

Emory A. Walling of Erie ran far ahead of Charles Palmer of Chester for Supreme Court Justice.

In the district contests for Congress the Republicans have at least held their own. It seems sure that they will retain 30 of the 36 seats in the delegation, and they may have more; as Representative J. J. Casey, Democrat, appears to be running behind in Luzerne county.

Indications are that Pennsylvania will have 32 Republican Congressmen as a result of yesterday's voting. In the Adams-York district the Republican candidate was defeated, while the Democratic incumbent in the Erie-Crawford failed of re-election.

Cambria county went Republican the first time in years. There is every indication that Warren Worth Bailey, the present Democratic Congressman, did not run sufficiently ahead of his ticket to be re-elected.

The heavy vote for the heads of the ticket carried along Charles A. Snyder and Harmon M. Kephart, Republican nominees for Auditor General and State Treasurer, respectively, and Snyder has probably been re-elected to the State Senate from Schuylkill county.

Both branches of the State Legislature will be strongly Republican, as many of the 25 senators elected from the odd numbered districts were Republicans seeking re-election. Of the 207 representatives elected to the Lower House, a majority is Republican.

G. O. P. LEADS IN SOMERSET.

Returns today showed that the Republicans had carried Somerset county by about 3,000 votes, with Hopwood running ahead of Sterling for Congress about 2,000 votes. The vote for President in some of the districts follows

HOLD THE SENATE

Democrats Will Remain in Control of the Upper House.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Late returns from Ohio indicating the re-election of Senator Atlee Pomerene, Democratic, over Myron T. Hetrick, Republican, virtually ended the possibility of Republican ascendancy in the Senate. With Democratic eladers insisting that Hitchcock in Nebraska and Pittman in Nevada have been re-elected, and with Kendrick probably elected in Wyoming, the political status of the new Senate would thus be Democrats 52, Republicans 42, with the result in Arizona and New Mexico still in doubt. Should the Republicans carry both, the Democratic majority would be eight.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—With 76 Congressional districts to be cleared up Republicans now have gained 19 seats over their quota in the present House while the Democrats have gained 10, a net gain of nine for the Republicans which reduced the Democratic majority of 23 to 5.

Two Democratic districts in New Jersey now reported doubtful would, if reversed, reduce the majority to one.

FIVE STATES DRY.

By Associated Press.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 8.—Headquarters for the Anti-Saloon League at Westerville, a suburb, today reported it had information that the dry forces had won statewide prohibition fights in five states in the election yesterday.

The states were Michigan, Montana, South Dakota, Utah and Nebraska. Michigan was carried by 80,000.

Kansas Returns Slow.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 8.—President Wilson's lead in Kansas increased slowly as more returns were received today. With half the state and many rural counties to be heard from it was impossible to place the state definitely in the column of either party.

Figures compiled at 11 o'clock showed Wilson 158,041 votes against 146,201 for Hughes. These figures were from 1,120 of the 2,474 precincts of the state.

Liner Not Warned.

LONDON, Nov. 8.—The Peninsular & Oriental liner Arabia received no warning from the submarine which sank her in the Mediterranean on Monday, according to a statement issued this morning by the admiralty. All the 437 passengers, including 169 women and children, and all the crew except two engineers, were saved.

Wisconsin is Safe.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 8.—Wisconsin gave Charles E. Hughes an estimated plurality of 20,000 over President Wilson based on returns from about two-thirds of the precincts.

Hunters Return.

Ray Kooser and Ross Showman returned home yesterday from a four days' hunting trip near Mill Run, bringing with them 32 rabbits, 12 pheasants and five gray squirrels.

STERLING FOR CONGRESS IS ONLY DEMOCRATIC VICTOR IN CITY; HUGHES GETS GOOD VOTE

FIFTH WARD IS FOR WILSON

Connellsville went safely Republican in everything except the Congressional fight; Bruce F. Sterling, Democrat, nosing out R. F. Hopwood, the Republican incumbent, by 59 votes. Hopwood carried the First, Second and Seventh Wards. Sterling carried the Fourth by the narrow margin of one vote. The "Bloody Third" rolled up a big vote for Sterling, as did the Sixth. The vote by wards follows:

Charles E. Hughes carried Connellsville by 175 votes, rolling up substantial pluralities in the First, Second, Fourth, Sixth and Seventh Wards. Horton, against whom the railroad brotherhoods had waged a fight, went through with flying colors. The Fifth Ward, a strong railroad district, gave a good vote to the Republicans. The results follow:

KILLED BY A DYNAMITE SHOT

Workman Returns to Light Fuse and Is Blown to Eternity When Blast Goes Off.

Returning to light a fuse of a dynamite shot which he supposed had gone out, C. Nicola Delgrosso was instantly killed about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon along the county road at Broad Ford when the charge suddenly exploded. His helper, Joe Ricci, 26, was seriously but not fatally injured.

Nicola was in charge of the blasting for the Bell-Bockel Company, county road contractors. A part of the hillside about 200 feet from Schlinger's hotel was being cut away and four charges of dynamite, consisting of 10 sticks, had been put in. Three of the shots had gone off and Nicola waited for a little while for the fourth explosion. The last shot was at the end of a long fuse and just as he reached the spot where the explosive had been placed the explosion occurred. Delgrosso was blown 50 feet down the road. Ricco was buried under a mass of dirt and stone but he was quickly extricated and brought to Connellsville on a Baltimore & Ohio engine. At the hospital it was found that he had a broken ankle and contusions of the body. He will recover.

OLD TIMERS CELEBRATE

Confident that Charles E. Hughes had a safe majority, loyal Republicans in Connellsville undertook to start a demonstration and at 3 o'clock this morning an impromptu parade was held through the business section. With J. B. Kurtz coaxing jubilant melodies out of his kettle-drum and Rice Shaw pouring forth stirring tunes from his fife, the pageant gained in force as stragglers fell into line at various points.

"Hurrah for Hughes," was the watchword and if any of the sleeping populace had any doubt as to who was to be the next President when they went to sleep, their fears were dispelled by the shouts of the paraders.

GOVERNMENT TELLS HOW SILVERWARE MAY BE CLEANED

Electrolytic Method Will Give Tarnished Metal a New, Satiny Finish.

BURNISHED SURFACE POSSIBLE

Cleaning System Has Been Recognized For Several Years; Procedure is Simple; Silver Tarnish Not Due to Oxidation But to Sulphur.

Special to The Courier.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—An easy and effective method of cleaning tarnished silverware by boiling in a soda and salt solution in contact with a clean piece of aluminum or zinc is recommended to housewives by the United States Department of Agriculture as a result of studies made by its specialists in home economics. The necessary procedure is so simple that it may be followed successfully in practically any home.

The cleaning system known as the electrolytic method has been well recognized for several years.

The tarnish which occurs on silver is not due to oxidation, but is dependent entirely upon the action of sulphur. In most cases the source of the sulphur causing tarnish is rubber, wool, foods like eggs, and the sulphur in the air due to burning illuminating gas and coal. The electrolytic cleaning method depends on the facts that this tarnish of silver sulphid is slightly soluble in the hot solution employed, and that it is broken down chemically and its silver content redeposited on the ware when the proper electrical conditions prevail. The presence of both the silver and the aluminum or zinc in the hot solution provides the necessary electrical conditions. Under this method, therefore, practically all the silver in the tarnish is returned to the object being cleaned. When silver polishes are used, on the other hand, all the silver in combination in the tarnish is removed.

In the cleaning method recommended by the Department the necessary materials are a graniteware cooking utensil deep enough to allow the silverware to be covered by the solution; a clean piece of aluminum or zinc, preferably the former; and baking or washing soda. The solution, consisting of a teaspoonful of baking or washing soda and a like amount of table salt to each quart of water, is brought to a boil in a graniteware or enameled utensil. A sheet of aluminum or clean zinc is dropped in. The tarnished silverware is then immersed in the solution so that it is in contact with the sheet of aluminum or zinc. The tarnish should disappear in a few seconds. The silver object should then be removed from the solution, rinsed, and dried with a soft cloth.

Aluminum is much more satisfactory than zinc for use in this cleaning process since it does not become coated with a layer of carbonates which would interfere with the chemical reaction. Zinc does form carbonates and, if used, must be cleaned frequently in dilute hydrochloric acid. A small sheet of aluminum may be purchased especially for silver-cleaning purposes or a piece of an old aluminum utensil well cleaned may be used. Utensils which would later be used in cooking operations should never be employed in cleaning silverware by the electrolytic method. If very large pieces of silver are to be cleaned and a container is required larger than can be placed conveniently on the stove, the hot solution may be poured into such a vessel and the silver object then immersed. The method is most effective, however, when the solution boils during the cleaning process, and efficiency is rapidly lowered as the temperature of the solution falls below the boiling point.

The electrolytic method gives the cleaned silver a satiny finish after several cleanings. If a burnished surface is desired, the silver must from time to time be polished lightly with some abrasive polishing material such as powdered whiting. The study made by the Department specialists included a comparison of the amount of silver lost when the whole tarnish was removed by polishing and when the electrolytic method was used. It was found that when whiting paste was used as an abrasive, spoons lost nearly 0.01 of a gram of silver each, approximately twenty-five times as much as when the "handmade" electrolytic method was employed.

U. S. HOSPITAL WORKERS PRAISED

By Associated Press.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—Drivers of the American Field Ambulances continue to receive citations and letters of appreciation for their work. Chief Surgeon Guibal of a division operating at Verdun writes:

"At the moment when an unexpected order of departure deprives the 129th Division of American Sanitary Section No. 3, the divisional surgeon desires to express to all its members his deepest thanks.

"Since April 25, 1915, the section has followed the division to the various points on the front where it has been in action; at Lay St. Chris tophe, in the dangerous sector of Thiaumont at Verdun, and at Bois-le-Petre.

"The American volunteers have everywhere shown an unforgettable example of devotion.

"They carry away with them the gratitude of our wounded, the admiration of all those who have seen them at work and the regrets caused by their departure.

"They leave behind them an example which it will be sufficient to recall when in another Verdun their successors will be called upon to show the courage of self-abnegation so necessary in the accomplishment of their mission."

General Blondin, commanding another division at Verdun, wrote on September 25 to Sub-Lieutenant Rodocanachi, of American Sanitary Section No. 2:

"I wish to express to you my congratulations for the unwearied activity, the devotion and the fearless contempt of danger shown by the drivers of American Sanitary Section No. 2, under your command, since their arrival at the Division and particularly in the course of the days and nights from September 18 to 20.

"The American drivers have shown themselves worthy sons of the great and generous nation for the emancipation of which our ancestors shed their blood.

"I cite to the order of the division drivers Carroll Riggs and Owen Kenan and would ask that you kindly transmit to all your drivers my congratulations and thanks."

General Blondin also mentions Riggs and Kenan in general orders for their courage and devotion. Carroll Riggs is from Washington, D. C., and a graduate of Yale University. Owen Kenan is from Kenansville, N. C., and was graduated from the University of North Carolina.

Stanley Dell of Princeton, N. J., and of Princeton University, has been cited in orders for his coolness, energy and disregard of danger as an automobile ambulance driver in Section No. 4, attached to Division 64, and especially for having brought, at a great personal risk, a non-commissioned officer to a surgical dressing station whose injuries were so bad that, had he not had immediate attention, he would have died.

A MONEY WARNING

At a time when grade crossing accidents are the source of ever-increasing expenditures by the railroads to cover the cost of damage suits; of further protection of crossings by grade separation, gates, watchmen, warning devices, lighting, signs, etc., and unremittant "Safety First" campaigns among employes and the public alike, it is refreshing to be reminded that some responsibility rest on the public, says the Railway Age Gazette, and, furthermore, that the responsibility may be translated into dollars and cents. On June 3 a passenger train on the Chesapeake & Eastern Illinois was approaching a crossing in open country near Danville, Ill., at its usual speed. The view was unobserved and the whistles sounded soon enough for the driver of a vehicle near the crossing to have ample time to stop to let the train pass. A man, who was driving an automobile toward the crossing at the time, paid no heed to the warnings, it is alleged, and was struck and killed. His automobile derailed and wrecked the locomotive and baggage car and caused injuries to the engineer, which later resulted in his death.

Mrs. Charles Everhart, wife of the engineman, has filed suit against the Daniel's estate for $5,000, and W. J. Jackson, receiver for the Chesapeake & Eastern Illinois has begun suit for $10,000 to cover the material damage to the train. Should these suits prove successful, they will serve as a wholesome deterrent to carelessness by automobile drivers. Disregard of one's personal safety seems to be a common and incurable trait of motorists. Observations by the railroads in California at 34 crossings disclosed the startling fact that out of 17,000 drivers of motor vehicles noted, 69½ per cent looked neither way before crossing tracks, 2.7 per cent looked in one direction only, and but 27.8 per cent looked both ways. Three thousand three hundred drivers observed, ran over the crossings at a reckless rate of speed. The prospect of a considerable monetary loss at the result of careless driving will, it is hoped, cause automobile drivers to stop, look and listen to a more appreciable extent than they have done heretofore.

THE REDUCTION OF WORKING TIME

Rather Than Shortage of Men is One Cause of Restricted Coal Output at West Va. Mines.

West Virginia coal operators, no less than their neighbors across the line in Pennsylvania, are suffering from restriction in output due to labor conditions. One large operating company points out that there is not so much a shortage of labor as there is a shortage of work produced by the labor employed in comparison with the results shown in previous years. A recent census by one operator revealed the fact that there were 50 per cent. more employes on the rolls, during a constant period of three months, than reported for work each day. In other words, only two-thirds of the number on the pay-roll were working each day during the period in question, and of the two-thirds total turnout, the tonnage produced per man was almost one ton per man per day under the results secured in previous years.

"The conclusion naturally arrived at therefore," say a correspondent of the Coke Trade Journal, "is that, due to the gradual but constant increase in mining rates, the average miner earns in four working days per week the amount which he himself sets as his standard, and, even in the four days per week that he does work, he is not compelled to exert himself to produce a satisfactory earning. This is not true of every employe, but of the average. We have a number of employes who are still eager to work each day and to earn as much each day as they can. On the other hand, however, we have employes who do not even want to work three days per week, and will not do so unless compelled by actual necessity.

"From actual operating results, therefore, there is a scarcity of labor. In actual numbers the shortage would not be so noticeable if the same tonnage per man per month could be secured as was obtainable in former years."

QUICK RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Get Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

That is the joyful cry of thousands since Dr. Edwards produced Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards, a practicing physician for 17 years and calomel's old-time enemy, discovered the formula for Olive Tablets while treating patients for chronic constipation and torpid livers.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do not contain calomel, but a healing, soothing vegetable laxative.

No griping is the "keynote" of these little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablets. They cause the bowels and liver to act normally. They never force them to unnatural action.

If you have a "dark brown mouth" now and then—a bad breath—a dull, tired feeling—sick headache—torpid liver and are constipated, you'll find quick, sure and only pleasant results from one or two little Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets at bedtime.

Thousands take one or two every night just to keep right. Try them. 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

Correct Eating

Little Talks on Health and Hygiene by Samuel G. Dixon, M. D., LL. D., Commissioner of Health.

Last week the health talk was on the sin of oversating. This week I want to surprise many readers by mentioning the fact that notwithstanding our markets are full, and the wheels of industry moving with unprecedented steadiness, keeping the dinner kettle of every able bodied person full of things to eat, we have many among us who believe themselves intelligent, and yet are starving to death.

The human body represents the most complicated piece of machinery known to men. To maintain it we must supply it with albumin found in meats, beans and some of the other vegetables. It must have starch or sugar found in bread, potatoes and sweets. We must have fats, also, found in meats, nuts and so on, and of course, preeminently in butter and good milk. The body also demands certain salts such as are found in many of the vegetables if they are not robbed of them by being soaked in water before or during the process of cooking.

The lower animals know somehow what foods nature demands to keep up healthy bodies and a strong physical development, while man's artificial life has extinguished that intuition which may have existed during his primitive existence.

Today we must urge our educators to teach children of understandable age the scheme of selecting a rational combination of foodstuffs.

At present we want real all-round family physicians whom mothers can consult as to how to feed their little flocks including the grown-ups of the household as well as the small children.

Proper feeding is one of the necessary factors in the development of the human body and in preserving a natural resistance to cancer and other diseases.

GET DOWN TO BUSINESS.

For those who have been making a business of campaigning for several weeks past, it is better now for both them and the community that they get down to business and to work. They have spent a lot of time, perhaps lost several opportunities, and may have made themselves somewhat of a nuisance to their less politically excitable friends, associates and neighbors. It has all been in the interest of the cause of good citizenship and good government, however, and to the degree that these have been properly served, all the time, effort and energy have been well spent.

Now that it is all over, the country will go along pretty much the same as before election and will need everybody to help in its going. It will be needed of them that they give close attention to their business, if they have one of their own; if employed by others in their business, they will need to give no less diligent attention to their employment. In either case, it is time to forget politics and get down to the less exciting every day duties of citizenship.

It is lamented at times that the even tenor of our ways, political, commercial and industrial, are disturbed by our quadrennial presidential campaigns. There is often reasonable grounds for complaint upon this score, but on the other hand they serve the very excellent purpose of stirring some people out of their lethargy. If a citizen hasn't interest enough in the conduct of his government to get wakened up by a real live political campaign, at least to the extent of giving serious thought to the issues involved, he is in danger of becoming somewhat of a drone, so far as his activities as a citizen go.

The campaign just closed had some features which should have aroused the most apathetic and which had the effect of doing even more for others less slow to lend themselves to the excitement of the hour. Both classes of citizens have no doubt been benefited by the awakening whether their candidate won or lost. Having been aroused to a new sense of their privileges and obligations as citizens and voters, and given expression by voice and vote, it now becomes them to resume their places in the busy affairs of life and do their part to assist in bringing about a realization of the ideals and principles to which all Americans hope our country will attain.

JEALOUS OF CONNELLSVILLE.

The possibility that Connellsville may secure a real bathing beach, boating pool and a park adornment of the river front seems to have aroused a slight feeling of jealousy in the bosom of our esteemed contemporary, the Greensburg Review. Its reference to the matter is not unkind, however, as will be seen:

"A bathing beach along the Yough! That's what Connellsville wants and one gentleman who has made an offer to contribute one-half of the amount necessary awaits in seclusion until one yet unheard from steps forth with the other half. Then will the work proceed and instead of long, dusty rides to far away coast resorts, the Mud Islanders may battle like mud turtles to their heart's content in the forbidding waters of the Yough.

"But while there's life there's hope and Connellsville and Dawson, in Fayette county, and McKeesport, in Allegheny county have ever and anon been turning eyes to Westmoreland county for the election of Colonel E. E. Robbins to Congress, hopeful of what he may be able to do toward putting that famous "Dam the Yough" slogan into practice.

"Is it any wonder with Colonel Robbins on the threshold of Congress that the aspirations of the people of Connellsville are going so far as to plan for a bathing beach along their water front? What a gay way we expect on the murky Yough, when river shipping will be resumed and bathing beaches will be scattered here and there along the banks of the stream. Some picture that.

"We readily admit that with Colonel Robbins elected to Congress Westmoreland county will have a certain proprietary claim upon the Yough, by virtue of his consistent advocacy of its slackwater improvement, but we ought not to be denied the privilege of its adornment, especially when Connellsville has the prior right of discovery, both of the picturesque stream itself and its adaptibility, and our own need, of it as a bathing beach.

The cabalistic figures "30,000" which have appeared in public places in the vicinity of Dickerson Run have no reference to any election estimates made on yesterday's results. They represent the goal which is sought by the nation-wide campaign among railroad men to increase the membership of the Young Men's Christian Associations. Dickerson Run will be heard from in this campaign not 30,000 strong, of course, but probably much closer to their own estimate than some of the election forecasters will come to theirs.

It has been too close for comfort in some places; others have been comfortably close.

It is yet too early for the "I told you so" idiot to break loose with much virulence.

By the time the farmers' institutes begin politics will have lost its charm as a topic of discussion.

The hecklers will have to hunt a new job now.

Some good Republican precincts forgot all their good training and early formed habits yesterday.

HENRY P. SNYDER

Tributes to His Worth and Services by Brother Editors and Others.

The Somerset Herald:

Henry P. Snyder, founder and editor of the Connellsville Courier, died Friday morning at his home in that city. He had been in delicate health for a number of years, and his death, while not unexpected came as a shock to his relatives and wide circle of friends. He was sitting in a chair in his bedroom when the end came. Mr. Snyder had planned a visit to his printing establishment for Saturday. Mr. Snyder was one of the best known newspaper men in Western Pennsylvania and the Courier under his guidance won an enviable position in the great manufacturing district it has ably represented for practically forty years. Mr. Snyder was best known as an editorial writer of exceptional ability, although he gave considerable attention to the business end of the printing business and to the development of the community in which he lived all his life. His death at the age of sixty years is an irreparable loss to Connellsville and the entire coke region.

Aloysius Coll, poet, writer and newspaper correspondent:

It was with real grief that I saw the news of Mr. Snyder's death. He was the first man to start me in life's march, and the one I grew to honor and esteem more and more every year, after I left the office and town just the same as before. What a game fight he made! And to me he seemed kindlier and finer as he must have grown weaker in all but mind and heart. He had both, if ever a man had, broad, lovable and fair; something hard to find in the run of men.

The Coal Trade Journal:

Everyone who has at any time been interested in or connected with the coke industry of the Connellsville district must have known of the weekly paper which has been covering the coke trade for so many years under the auspices of Henry P. Snyder, and it is with regret that we note his death, which occurred on the 20th inst. after an illness extending over several years. Surely the work of his lifetime, making known the merits and value of the coke of that district, as well as carrying forward the statistical records thereof, are appreciated by everyone connected with the mineral industry of Pennsylvania.

LAST INVESTMENT.

Before I buy my gasoline, I pay the the grocer for his prunes, the druggist for his Paris green, the clothier for his pantaloons. I wouldn't much enjoy my car, if merchants watched it, as it goes, remarking, "'Twould be better far, if he would pay us what he owes." While scorching up the village street, behind the walnut steering wheel, I'd hate it much if I should meet a man I owe for buckwheat meal. I'd hate to drive, in pomp and state, across the market's paving stones, and run across some needy skate to whom I owe eleven bones. My car may rust in yonder shed before I'll send it on its way, to meet the chap who sold me bread and had to whistle for his pay. I pay the barber for his shave, the newsman for his magazine, the sexton for his hand made grave, before I buy gasoline. I pay the butcher for his veal, the tinner for his soup tureen, the learned attorney for his spiel before I buy my gasoline. I pay for soda, salts and soap, for my supply of nicotine, for surgeon's saws and druggists' dope, before I buy my gasoline.

Rann-dom Reels

By Howard L. Rann.

PLATO.

Plato was a prominent citizen of Greece who was born several hundred years B. C. and succeeded in dying a natural death. He had several first-rate opportunities to commit suicide, but preferred to live a long, useful life, surrounded by luxury and the treacherous Greek adjective, which he finally subdued and taught to eat out of his hand.

Plato was a pupil of the unfortunate Socrates, one of the best men that Greece ever produced but who came to a sad end by drinking something that caused him to expire in a heartfelt manner. Plato used to sit at Socrates' feet and drink in the Greek parts of speech as they flowed in an unceasing stream from his neatly parted beard, and when Socrates had gone hence Plato took over his practice and continued to operate on the Greek language with good results.

Plato was born on an island, his father and mother being present at the time, and at a tender age began to write poetry. He retained most of this poetry until he became of age, as there seemed to be no popular demand for it, when he destroyed it after reading some of it out loud. It took courage to do this, but how much better it would be if Plato's example were more generally followed.

Plato used to sit at Socrates' feet and drink in the Greek parts of speech as they flowed from his neatly parted beard.

When he was 40 years of age, Plato, who had gone to Egypt to escape the hay fever, which impeded the flow of his pure Grecian vocabulary, returned to Athens and opened a private school where he taught people how to be happy though good. This was a new thing for Athens, and resulted in closing the saloons. Plato's teachings, however, have never been very popular, as he was opposed to liquor, tobacco and the wearing of underclothes. He died of old age, but retained his mental vigor and smooth transmission action until the end.

The WASHINGTON-CRAWFORD LETTERS

Concerning Frontier Life When Connellsville was in the Making 1767-1781

Letter No. 41

Major Crawford Becomes Colonel in Service Against the British.

The part which Major Crawford took in Dunmore's War operated to greatly prejudice him among his Pennsylvania friends, for among them the conflict had been an exceedingly unpopular one. Having first sided with Pennsylvania in the boundary dispute, Crawford now took the part of Virginia, under which province he had served in the war against the Indians. Having aroused the enmity of the Pennsylvanians, the latter were instrumental in having him removed from all the offices to which he had been appointed under that province. Later he was commissioned as a justice for the county of Augusta, to hold court at Fort Dunmore, and became an active partisan in extending the jurisdiction of Virginia over the territory claimed by Pennsylvania. As such he doubtless allowed his zeal in behalf of his native province to get the better of his judgment and lead him to commit some acts that were considered oppressive by the Pennsylvanians. When the call came for assistance in the struggle for independence of the colonies all the bitterness which had developed from his partisanship was forgotten in the ready response and noble patriotism with which he served his country in that hour of its needs.

During this period of his career his correspondence with Washington seems to have been interrupted, leastways no letters have been preserved between March 6, 1775 and September 20, 1776. Meantime Major Crawford had helped to recruit a regiment, the Fifth Virginia, in which he was commissioned lieutenant colonel. He remained with this organization but a short time when he was called to command the Seventh Virginia and still later was assigned to the duty of raising the Thirteenth Virginia, or the "West Augusta" regiment, in the section of the country west of the Alleghenies.

Before entering upon the latter duty Colonel Crawford was stationed at Williamsburg, Va., the headquarters of the Virginia troops. From this place he wrote Washington, September 20, 1775, informing him of the situation in the Western country which at that time gravely apprehended renewed troubles with the Indians. An attempt to hold a peace conference with the dissatisfied natives had failed, except with such tribes as the British influence at Detroit had not been succeeded in inducing to espouse the cause of the British.

Before leaving Stewart's Crossing for Williamsburg, Colonel Crawford made a visit to Washington's new mill, in the operation of which he knew Washington would be much interested, hence he makes reference to it in the opening paragraph of his letter:

I should have been glad to have the honor of being with you at New York, but I am doubtful we shall be involved in an Indian war to the westward, as the Shawanese and Delawares seem in doubt; and from the last accounts from Fort Pitt had not met our people (Doctor Walker and the Commissioners) who were sent to treat with them from this Government. I should have come to New York with those regiments ordered there, but the regiment I belong to is ordered to this place. If a war with the westerly Indians happen, I am to go there. I, this spring, before I came from over the mountain, called at Simpson's to see your mill go for the first time its running; and can assure you that I think it the best mill I ever saw anywhere, although I think one of a less value would have done as well.

If you remember, you saw some rocks at the mill-seat. These are as fine mill-stone grit as any in America. The mill-wright told me the stones he got for your mill there were equal to English burr. Your land on Chartier's Creek is well cultivated, ready to your hand; the men on it thinking you have no patent for it, or if you have that you will lease the land on reasonable terms.

At our last Convention, I mentioned the state of lands and the state of the claimants in general; and amongst other circumstances, mentioned the expense you had been at in having (made) the first improvements on that land, and then laying a warrant on them, and, notwithstanding, those persons would take it at any rate; upon which an ordinance passed, that all equitable claims should take place.

Some, I understand, have since been trying to sell their rights on your land; but I have had an advertisement printed and sent up, forwarning any person to purchase those lands setting forth your title.

I have laid the balance of your warrant on some land on the river, that I think will suit; but I have not got it run out to mind, as there is some dispute, and I believe I shall buy them out if I can reasonably. Excuse the length of this letter. I shall only add that I wish you to enjoy life, health, and overcome all enemies; and I should be happy to see you once more enjoy yourself in pleasure at Mount Vernon. I am, etc.

A notice was posted yesterday at the pipe mill that the mill was closed on account of election day and a notice for today states that it is closed on account of a death, while a strike leader stated last evening that it was only a freeze-out to the strikers. The men have been very orderly. No meetings have been held by them, but word has been quietly passed from man to man.

At a meeting of the borough council on Monday evening all of the bills were paid and the secretary, Frank Newcomer, reported Manager Burton of the Citizens' Water Company had stated that all of the fire plugs had been flushed on September 27 and 28. Council passed a resolution to be sent to the Philadelphia office of the Citizens' Water Company stating that they doubted the word of Burton in the matter. A communication was read from the fire department and this was laid on the table until a meeting next Monday night. The tax collector reported taxes collected to the amount of $1,889.13 and gave the interest due the borough, receipts of the weighmaster, burgess moneys and permits at $296.07. The council promised backing to Burgess Newton Porter if he went after a Wilkes-Barre man who had exceeded the speed limit in Scottdale and when notified refused to pay his fine. The secretary was notified to ask property holders on Broadway to abate the water nuisance on that street.

CHILDREN HATE PILLS, CALOMEL AND CASTOR OIL

If Cross, Feverish, Constipated Give "California Syrup of Figs."

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. See that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.—Adv.

WASH YOUR NOSE

on the inside. You breathe through your nose, and every germ you draw in while in crowded street cars or in houses where people have colds, catarrh, grippe, and the like, lodges on the delicate tissues of the nasal passages. If these germs are given time they go down into your throat and cause colds and grippe, and often go farther into your bronchial tubes and lungs. The diseases they cause here may only make you miserable for a few weeks, or they may develop into serious afflictions.

As soon as you have a "stopped-up" feeling in your nose, you should be sure to give it a good bath. Take an atomizer and fill it from a glass of clear water into which you have put five to ten drops of Hyclorite. Throw your head back, and inject the solution into the passages. Do this several times. This nose bath will kill germs promptly, and refresh and soothe the delicate membranes. Keep up this treatment for a few days and you will keep colds and grippe from developing, because the Hyclorite kills the germs which cause them.

Hyclorite is a solution of sodium hypochlorite such as has saved so many from blood poisoning and disease in the European war. The U. S. Government reports say that a hypochlorite solution is the most effective and economical employed by the Anglo-French army surgeons.

Although many times more powerful than the harmful antiseptics which contain poisons, acids, mercury or dangerous preservatives, Hyclorite is even safer than the weak and ineffective peroxides. It is clean, clear and harmless as water—but powerful. Any druggist can supply Hyclorite in 25 and 50 ct. bottles. General Laboratories, Madison, Wisconsin.

ION-O-LEX UNGUENT

Probably the most important discovery that has been made in the field of medicine in fifty years.

A DETROIT PHYSICIAN WRITES:

"I am commencing to believe that Ion-o-lex Unguent is all—and even more than you claim for it—.

"In one bad case of tonsillitis the temperature was reduced from 103 to normal in 24 hours. In former attacks this patient has always suffered from 5 to 10 days.

"My own wife has suffered with spasmodic contractions of the throat for 12 or 14 years, and it has always been necessary to administer narcotics for relaxation.

"The last attack was unusually severe, being a combination of the throat trouble and pneumonia—Ion-o-lex Unguent and Liquid kept the disease under perfect control, and by the fifth morning the temperature was reduced from 103 to normal—Ion-o-lex is the only thing we have ever found that has given her any relief whatever.

"I am using Ion-o-lex Unguent in my general practice, and cannot say too much for it."

Another prominent Detroit Physician prescribed Ion-o-lex Unguent as a last resort for a deep-seated felon, upon which an operation had been pronounced absolutely necessary. Inside of 24 hours the patient was so much better that the operation was entirely unnecessary, and recovery was surprisingly speedy.

Use Ion-o-lex Unguent wherever there is local inflammation—It should always be used in coughs, sore throat, bronchitis, tonsillitis, pneumonia, neuritis, acute rheumatism, eczema, erysipelas, and in all cases of burns, scalds and wounds or anywhere else that there is apt to be inflammation.

MAKE EXCELLENT PROGRESS ON THE ALASKAN RAILROAD

Chairman Edes of the Alaskan Engineering Commission Makes Report.

130 MILES OF TRACK COMPLETED

United States Government Hopes to Encourage Farmers from States to Come to Alaska and Take Homesteads in Territory of the Railroad.

By Associated Press.

SEWARD, Alaska, Nov. 8.—William C. Edes, chairman of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, who recently returned from Anchorage, reports excellent progress on the construction of the United States railroad.

Fifty-nine miles of track have been laid from Anchorage. With the seventy-one miles of the old Alaska Northern Railway that are now in operation to Kearn Creek, there have been completed 130 miles of the 470 that will connect Seward with Fairbank. The track so far laid from Anchorage consists of six miles south toward Seward, thirty-eight miles of main line northward to Fairbanks, and fifteen miles on the Matanuska branch into the Matanuska coal fields.

The right of way has been cleared from Potter Creek, on Turnagain Arm, to Kings River, in the Matanuska coal field, a distance of seventy-seven miles, and on the main line from Matanuska to the Little Susitna River. Rail will be laid this fall as far as Kings River, on the Matanuska Branch, a distance of sixty-two miles from Anchorage, and to Wassilla on the main line, approximately 15 miles from Matanuska. On the main line in the Susitna Valley between Montana creek and Indian river, a distance of 55 miniles, the right of way is 70 per cent cleared and a number of grading contracts have been let. Grading of the right of way will proceed in this section from Talkeetna to Willow creek, and north to Broad Pass. At Willow creek it will connect with the work under the Matanuska district, and at Broad Pass with the work from the Nenana division.

Rail will be laid in the near future as far as Potter Creek, which is fifteen miles southeast of Anchorage on Turnagian Arm, and from which point the rock work on Turnagian Arm will be attacked during the winter.

For the week ending September 9, 3,568 men were employed on the Anchorage Division, which includes Commission employes, stationmen and laborers, the August payroll being $258,330,000.

The population of Anchorage, which is the main construction base on the railroad, is between 4,000 and 5,000. At Matanuska, the junction of the Matanuska branch with the main line, a townsite was recently surveyed by the Government and a town is now in course of development. There is also a small town at Moose Creek, about fifty miles from Anchorage, where the first mine on the railroad is in operation. At Wassilla, the name of the town where the railroad crosses the Knik-Willow Creek wagon road, several people are gathering. Wasafila will be the distributing point for freight and supplies for the Willow Creek mining district. The Government is taking immediate steps to survey small townsites at these places.

The railroad north and south from Anchorage passes through and develops a large agricultural country. There are now between 500 and 1,000 homesteaders along the line of the railroad in this section, and the agricultural land is being rapidly developed. The homesteaders are supplying a considerable portion of the foodstuffs for the railroad employees and other people in that section of the country. Recently the Alaskan Engineering Commission contracted for 400 tons, or over 12,000 bushels of potatoes with the Matanuska farmers. Products are being hauled by the farmers to Matanuska and shipped over the railroad to Anchorage and other points along the line. There is still room for a large number of homesteaders in the vicinity of the railroad, and the Government hopes to encourage farmers from the states to come to Alaska and take up homesteads in the territory tributary to the railroad in order to develop the agricultural lands so that the country may some day in the near future be self-supporting.

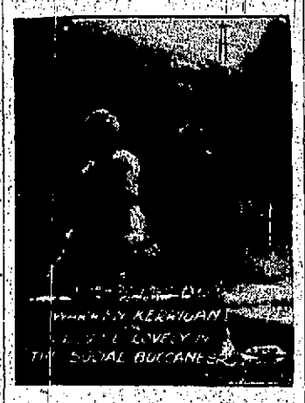
At the Theatres

SOISSON THEATRE.

"THE SOCIAL BUCCANEER."—Based on Frederic S. Isham's widely popular novel, "The Social Buccaneer," a Bluebird photoplay of promised excellence, is to be the attraction at the Soisson Theatre today with J. Warren Kerrigan, Louise Lovely, Maude George, Harry Carter, Hayward Mack and other skillful members of the Bluebird organization, depicting the stirring and engaging episodes



Those who have read the story will be interested in seeing it photoplayed, and for others who have not perused the narrative there is assurance of splendid entertainment, regardless. Epitomizing the plot: Chatterfield Bruce, an American in China, observes the methods of a pirate who robs the rich shipowners to give rice to the poor. Bruce is so impressed with the idea that he decides, upon returning home, to make a similar division of wealth, insofar as he can, by similar methods. Robin Hood practised the same scheme centuries ago; but the dashing Englishman is not known to have landed in the cheerful lap of matrimony in the fashion Bruce ultimately accomplished. The happy ending to Bruce's adventures in high society, where he filched jewels, pearls and precious stones from the over-wealthy, was not attained without hair-breadth escapes from detection. Far from such; Bruce had various tight squeezes before the one in final matrimonial climax. Thus the story is carried along in breezy episodes without very serious harm befalling anybody in particular, barring, of course, the disappearance of costly jewels and the nerve-racking attendant thereon. J. Warren Kerrigan, to his thousands of admirers, will typify the bold and reckless hero of the piece, and Louise Lovely, correctly named if girl ever was, will impersonate a heroine charming enough to reform the most hardened criminal if she were in the reforming business. But as Marjorie Woods, the society leader, Miss Lovely seeks only to reform Bruce, the social buccaneer, and lets not even matrimony interfere with her purpose.

"THE NARROW CREED"—A Big-U drama in two reels with Murdock MacQuarrie in the leading role. Edythe Sterling in the part of a girl who is wronged and then befriended by the old doctor is convincing and gets over her big scenes in a quiet manner that is effective without being in the least forced or stiff. "Windsor McCay and His Jersey Skeeter," a Powers cartoon comedy. "The Governor's Decision," an Imp drama. Tomorrow the five reel Gold Rooster drama, "The Shadow of Her Past," with Lina Cavallera.

THE PARAMOUNT.

"THE DEVIL'S NEEDLE"—A Triangle drama presenting Norma Talmadge and Tully Marshall, is today's feature attraction. In the picture Mr. Marshall is seen in the kind of a part in which he achieved his greatest fame on the speaking stage, that of a morphine fiend. In "The Devil's Needle," Marshall makes his first appearance on the screen in the role of a dope fiend. He appears as David Stanley, an artist of note. Rene, his favorite model, played by Nora Talmadge, is a child of poverty, and through evil associations in her early girlhood has acquired the morphine habit. This is the one thing she has never told Stanley, the other being her love for him. One day Wynne Mortimer, a society girl, visits Stanley's studio, with her fiance, Hugh Gordon. She falls in love with the artist, breaks her engagement to Gordon and marries him. Rene, controlled by evil impulses, when she finds the artist in love with another woman, induces him to try the needle as a spur to his artistic inspiration. The habit fastened upon him, Stanley sinks lower after his marriage until his career is ruined and his wife's heart broken. Seeking to rescue her husband from an opium den the girl is kidnapped and in peril of her life, Rene realizing the horror she has wrought comes to the rescue and succeeds in saving the wife from her peril and the husband from the deadly habit, which she herself has overcome. A Keystone comedy, "The Winning Punch," with Ford Sterling as the leading character, is included. Tomorrow, William Russell will be featured in "The Torch Bearer," a drama of powerful interest. Thursday, November 16, "The Ne'er Do Well," with Kathlyn Williams in the leading role, will be presented. The production is in ten reels.

Ty Cobb, of the baseball world, has joined the ranks of the motion picture artists. After having been besieged with offers to appear before the camera, Cobb finally fell for the screen acting game and affixed his signature to the Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation's contract. He has started work on his first picture, "Somewhere In Georgia."

Douglas Fairbanks' new play on which he has just commenced work in the coast Triangle studios is called "The Matrimaniac."

Facts Versus Fallacies

FACT is a real state of things. FALLACY is an apparently genuine but really illogical statement or argument.

FEW persons realize how important the saloon is, not only as an economic factor, but in providing, at small cost, relaxation for the working man. Without the saloon the already heavy burden of taxation would be increased. The $100,000,000 war tax demonstrated partially what that burden would be, but if national prohibition should do away with the jobs of a million men as well as hundreds of millions of dollars of tax and license money, it would be a knockout blow to the prosperity of the country.

WITHOUT saloons the people would have fewer pleasures, less comfort and happiness. The saloon is the poor man's club. It is the chief means of recreation for the working man. More and more people are beginning to realize that the pace that kills is the pace that has no let-up—that the work and worry, toil and turmoil of modern life are too much for the man who cannot find some harmless, inexpensive way of rejuvenating his tired nervous system and brain.

REAL rest and recreation cannot come from athletics. Hugo Munsterberg, of Harvard University, a recognized authority on the subject, says: "We know, today, too well that physical exercise and sport is not real rest for the exhausted brain cells. Sharp physical and mental labor, the constant hurry and drudgery produce a state of tension and irritation which demands before the night's sleep some dulling inhibition if a dangerous unrest is not to set in. Alcohol relieves that daily tension most directly."

The Saloon is the Poor Man's Club

THE saloon is a necessity as well as a luxury. It contributes more toward the comfort and happiness of the people than the jeweler, the milliner, the modiste, dance-halls, theatres, pool-rooms, professional baseball, cigars, cigarettes, art or music. The good it does far outweighs the trifling harm that results from the excesses of a few. Experience and observation show that less than three per cent. of the people are harmed by over-indulgence in alcoholic liquors.

HAPPINESS is the real object in life. It takes precedent over all other things. Wealth, position, religion, are simply means toward that end. So is the saloon. It gives the cheapest and best of material mediums because it gives the greatest amount of pleasure to the most people for the least money.

Less than 3% Use Liquor to Excess

IT is a FALLACY to say that which gives so much pleasure at so small a cost, and to so many people, is harmful—when FACTS show that less than three per cent. indulge to excess, and that ninety-seven per cent. use alcoholic beverages moderately and temperately.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Owner of the Mine.

At that moment Vandervyn loped up over the edge of the terrace, waving his hat to Marie. Then he caught sight of Hardy, over beyond the girl, and the exultant yell died on his lips. He put the curb on his pony, and sprang off beside Dupont and the girl, his face frightful with rage.

His voice was high-pitched and light, almost airy! "So—he cut across afoot. He thought to do me!"

"Has, you mean!" snarled Dupont. "Got his notices posted. That's his last stake."

Vandervyn whirled and snatched his rifle from its saddle sheath. Marie caught her father's arm to drag him aside; but he was already backing away, his eyes fixed apprehensively on Hardy. It was time for bullets to come streaming from the automatic pistol. Hardy could have drawn and opened fire while Vandervyn was freeing his rifle.

To the astonishment of all three, Hardy made no attempt to "get the drop" on his opponent. Instead, he started to advance upon Vandervyn at a quick, deliberate pace, his hands hanging empty at his sides, his face calm and stern.

"Put down that gun!" he commanded.

Vandervyn was leveling the rifle. He took aim straight between Hardy's eyes. His finger kissed the trigger. The slightest twitch would have sent the bullet crashing through Hardy's brain, and the slightest sign of fear or hesitancy on Hardy's part would have caused that twitch. He was looking death in the face. Vandervyn was in a murderous fury.

Yet Hardy came on—quick, steady, absolutely calm. His gaze passed above the deadly muzzle, along the foreshortened barrel, to the narrow-lidded, bloodshot eyes of Vandervyn. His voice rang out again, clear and sharp with authority:

The Trader Reached for His Revolver

"Put down that rifle—put it down, sir!"

The muscles of Vandervyn's neck twitched. Along the top of the barrel he was glaring back at Hardy—glaring into those hazel eyes that met his fury with the clear, cool gaze of absolute courage. The sheer nerve of that steady approach to his rifle muzzle compelled him to pause. It disconcerted him; it struck a chill into the heat of his frenzy.

Still Hardy advanced, swift and steady, his gaze never so much as flickering. Now his eyes and forehead, close beyond the foresight of the rifle, appeared enormously enlarged to Vandervyn's distorted vision. Steadily Hardy put up his hand, took hold of the rifle barrel, and turned the muzzle aside.

"Ah-h-h!" gasped Marie.

Hardy drew the rifle out of Vandervyn's relaxing grasp.

"Stand aside, sir!" he quietly commanded. "I wish to speak alone with Miss Dupont."

Vandervyn had parted with his rifle as if dazed. At the sound of Hardy's voice a fresh wave of crimson flooded his face. He stepped back, and jerked out his revolver. Hardy leaped upon him like a panther, and struck the weapon aside. The heavy ullet whizzed past Hardy's head. A moment later, Vandervyn, though the younger and perhaps the stronger of the two, reeled away, clutching his lacerated trigger finger. Hardy stood with the revolver in his hand. He turned to Marie.

"May I ask for a few words alone with you?"

"No!" Vandervyn hoarsely forbade the girl. "You shall not speak with him. Jake, you're her father—tell her she shall not."

"You know she don't never mind what I say," mumbled Dupont. "Anyway, it sort of looks like Cap is running this here shindy."

Hardy had not glanced away from Marie. Throughout that supreme test of the will power and courage of her two lovers, she had stood tense and silent, as if spellbound. She now looked from one to the other, her face inscrutably calm, her black eyes fathomless.

"I will hear what Captain Hardy has to say," she said.

Hardy motioned her father and Vandervyn toward the mine dump. They obeyed.

"We are alone," said Marie.

Hardy smiled. "I won the race."

"Was it fair, cutting across country?"

"Fair? Then you did not know of his scheme."

"What scheme? I do not understand."

"It does not now matter. I won the race and—the mine."

"Do you expect me to rejoice with you?" asked the girl. "It has cost my father his half of the mine."

"How so? He is not an entryman."

"Reggie gave him a deed to a half-interest."

"I see," said Hardy. "Quite in keeping. The deed is absolutely void, and would have been no less so even had the grantor been first to reach here."

"You doubt his good faith!" The girl glanced past him toward the sullen figure of Vandervyn on the mine dump with her father. "So you thought it better to take it all yourself than to let him take it all?"

"Yes," agreed Hardy.

The girl's red lips curved in an ironical smile.

"I do not go with the mine—necessarily."

"No. But the mine necessarily goes with you—now," replied Hardy.

"Be so kind as to explain. I understand that you were ordered to Alaska."

"Were you not told of my return as far as the butte?"

"Then your orders to leave were countermanded," Marie evaded the question.

His eyes darkened, and his face contracted as if from a twinge of pain. But he replied with quiet steadiness: "That is of no consequence. May I ask if you consider my word good?"

"Yes." The answer was given without an instant's hesitation.

He smiled gravely. "You cannot think I came back to win the mine for myself. You have my word that I will assign it to you as soon as I have the legal right."

"To me? But why?" The dilating eyes of the girl showed her utter surprise and astonishment. "Why? There, that last night at the agency, you showed that you despised me."

"Never that," he disclaimed. "I was bitter—harsh. But the suddenness of the discovery that you and he— Let us not talk of that. It is past. I would not have come back to trouble you, only—" Again he stopped. "I had to come back and do this thing. It was necessary that you should become owner of the mine—sole owner. It is to be yours, not his. Promise me that you will never give him any share in it. That is all I ask."

"I will not promise unless you tell me your reason for asking it, and unless you tell me your reason for doing what you have done."

Hardy whitened. "Very well, then. It is simply this: If you own the mine, he will wish to marry you."

"If I— But he already wishes to—". The girl hesitated, and fell silent, her black eyebrows bent in thought.

"I do not seek to persuade you to the contrary," said Hardy. "All I ask is that you give me your promise to allow him no share in the mine."

Marie looked down. After a silence she answered in a low tone: "I promise."

"That is all," he said. "I must now be going."

"Wait," she urged. "You have not told me why—why you have done this."

"Is it necessary?" he replied. "Please do not fancy it is because I am at all unselfish. You have promised yourself to him. Knowing that I no longer had even a fighting chance, I have merely sought to make sure that he—that you should have at least a fair opportunity to be happy. That is all."

He lingered a moment for a last look at her beautiful face, upon which had fallen the inscrutable stolidity of the Indian in her nature. No other expression could have so completely confirmed him in his belief that he had lost his fighting chance to win her. He faced about to return up the mountain the way he had come.

Marie stood as he left her, silent and immobile, following his brisk ascent up the path to the mine shaft with a wide-eyed gaze that perceived the objective image, yet at the same time seemed to be looking inward. A purpling that shaded the blue-blackness of her eyes to violet-black alone betrayed the intensity of her emotion.

The receding figure had passed along the spur to the foot of the steep ascent up the mountain before the girl became aware that Vandervyn was close beside her. He started to pass behind, to where Hardy had dropped the rifle and revolver. In a flash of swift movement she sprang ahead of him and set her foot upon the rifle barrel.

"You shall not."

Her voice was low and seemingly tranquil, her face as stolid as before, but the look in her eyes made him hesitate. He glanced about at Dupont.

"You Shall Not!"

The trader had turned his back on Hardy, and was staring fixedly into the valley at a party of Indians that had come down the far side and were pitching their camp in the meadow. It was evident that he did not propose to be a witness to anything Vandervyn might do.

"Mon pere," quietly called Marie.

He shot a startled glance at her, hesitated, and came over to them. Vandervyn's eyes were upturned to the figure on the mountainside in a look of hate that was not pleasant to see. Dupont followed the menacing stare, and then glanced away as if caught in the guilty act. Fast as Hardy was scaling the ascent, he was still within easy rifle shot and would continue to be for several minutes.

Vandervyn moistened his dry lips, and muttered hoarsely: "Take her into the cabin. She—won't let me—do it."

Dupont coughed, and spoke in a husky voice. "Come into the cabin, Marie."

"No," she replied.

"But listen, girl," he urged. "No one won't never know, and we won't be looking. We can lay it on the same buck Indian what has tried to git him twice a'ready. There's a lot of 'em just come into the valley— Don't look at me that way. The dirty sneak has took our mine away from us—he done it by a trick, cutting 'cross afoot. Mr. Van can't afford to marry you if me and him don't git the mine."

"What if I should get it?" asked the girl, with no shade of change in her inscrutable calm.

Vandervyn whirled upon her, his face convulsed with jealous fury. "So that's it! You've sold yourself to him! You—" He stopped, silenced by her look.

After a pause she quietly remarked: "He gives me the mine. He is going away. I do not know where. Instead of you, I am to be the owner of the mine. Do you wish to marry me?"

CHAPTER XXIII.

A Wedding Postponed.

Vandervyn's face darkened with suspicion.

"If you're not playing me, then he has lied to you, in order to get away from us."

Marie's lips curved in a half-smile. "He gave me his word of honor. Do you doubt it?"

The young man's jaw dropped slack. He could not even pretend to doubt her statement or Hardy's word. He looked down, his brows knotted and eyes contracted with intense thought. Dupont took the news in a far different manner.

"By Gar!" he exulted. "He's going to give you the mine? You're dead sure of it? By Gar! I call that mighty square of Cap. It's white! And me a-thinking he done it all to git back at us. It sure is white of Cap. Why, it's nearly the same like he had give it to me!"

"He named only one condition," remarked Marie.

Vandervyn started, and looked up at her. She met him with a level glance that told nothing of what she was thinking.

"One condition," she repeated. "It was my promise not to give you any share in the mine."

"Me?" queried Dupont.

"No."

"I see," threatened Vandervyn. "He thinks to force you from having anything to do with me."

"On the contrary, he seemed to think it would—not prevent our marrying."

Vandervyn stared in bewilderment. Hardy's action seemed incredible. Then he thought he perceived the explanation, and rallied from his perplexity. His frown gave place to a cynical smile.

"O-ho, my lady! I see. You worked him with the soft pedal—the saphead! The easy mark! He's just the kind of duffer to fall for the wail of a pretty girl with a tear in her eye and a quaver in her throat. Good for you, sweetheart! You beat him at his own game. He tried a bluff, thinking you'd be silly enough to throw me over for him. You called him, and he had to make good. The fool—to think you'd be soft enough to turn from me to him, just because he made a play to the galleries with his offer! Oh, what an easymark!"

"Is that exactly the right term?" calmly inquired the girl.

"None better!" exulted Vandervyn. "He made you promise not to give me a share in the mine. Mining property is real estate. An agreement in regard to real estate is not binding unless in writing."

Marie's tranquil face took on an expression of artless concern. "Oh, really? Then his promise to give me the mine is not binding."

"Don't worry," reassured Vandervyn. "He will keep his word. You are sure of the mine."

"But, of course, if I take back my promise, it will be no more than fair to give him the chance to take back his," she innocently remarked.

"Not at all, sweetheart," he replied. "You can do as you please. A woman's promises are not considered binding—in business matters. Legally, in most of the states, she is rated as a minor."

"Wimmen ain't minors no longer in our state," interjected Dupont.

"Thank you for reminding me, Pere," said his daughter. She looked at Vandervyn with naive seriousness. "So you see I must keep my promise."

"Oh, I say now, don't be a—" He detected something behind her look of childlike artlessness, and hastened to concede the point. "But of course if you feel that way about it! You will not have to break your promise after—The law will then make your property mine. So that is settled, sweetheart. Now comes the main question. When shall we be married?"

The girl quivered at the word. He stepped close, and looked into her eyes, his own glowing golden with ardor. She dropped her gaze, and drew back from him as if confused by the suddenness of his proposal.

"I—must think," she murmured. "Would it not be best to—wait until he has given me the mine?"

"Not when you have his word that he will do it. Anyway, there's no harm in naming the day. Come, make it an early one!"

The girl's rich color deepened with a blush.

"Not now!" she replied, struggling to recover her composure. "You must wait. Perhaps tomorrow—but now I—" She glanced around as if looking for a way of escape. There was no promise of succor in her father's complacent grin. Her gaze darted down into the valley; it rested upon the encamping Indians. "Look," she murmured. "That is Thunderbolt's tepee. I am going down to see him. He should be told that he may be prosecuted if he hunts here now. It is no longer tribal land."

"There's no need, sweetheart," said Vandervyn. "I will see to it that no one interferes with the chief and his band."

"I shall go down and tell him," she insisted. "No, do not come with me."

He frowned at her willfulness, shrugged, and turned to Dupont.

"Come into the cabin, Jake, and give me a drop of something," he urged. "I'm dry as a bone. . . That ride wasn't any joke!"

Marie was already hastening down the mountain slope into the valley. When she came to the camp, she was received with pleasant greetings. The keen eyes of the Indians had long ago perceived and recognized the white people on the terrace.

The venerable figure of Ti-owa-konza appeared in the entrance of the biggest tepee. He disappeared. A moment later three women came out of the tepee, and one of them told the girl that the chief wished her to go in. She stooped and passed through the low opening.

The chief was seated at the far side of the tepee near an outstretched blanketed form. There was no one else present. He beckoned Marie to come across to him. As she approached, she saw that the hair of the still figure before him was braided, after the fashion of the maidens of the tribe. She bent over and looked into a face that was so thin and pale that at first she did not recognize it. The large, sunken eyes opened and looked up at her with a startled gaze.

"Oinna!" she exclaimed, and she knelt down beside the girl. "You are ill."

"No— Go 'way, please," begged the wretched girl. A slow flush reddened her wan face. She sought to turn from the visitor. "I want to be alone. I am ashamed. Go 'way, please."

Marie looked up at Ti-owa-konza. He saw the pity in her eyes, and spoke softly in Lakotah:

"Rose who art white yet red, in the flower of the golden lily a worm is gnawing. The golden lily withers. Pluck out the worm, else she will fade and go from me."

He stood up and wrapped his blanket about him and went out.

An hour passed. Through the canvas wall of the tent those outside heard a low murmuring and at times the sound of sobbing. At last Marie raised the edge of the tepee and spoke to a group of women. One of them hastened to fetch from the fire a bowl of hot broth. She went into the tepee, and at once came out again without the bowl.

"I Want to Be Alone. I Am Shamed."

There followed another long wait. But no more crying could be heard, and gradually the sound of the low voices within the tepee died away to silence. Ti-owa-konza came back to the entrance, listened awhile, and noiselessly slipped inside.

Oinna lay with her head on Marie's breast. Her eyes were closed. She had fallen into the peaceful, healing slumber of childhood. A smile hovered on her half-parted lips. The bowl beside her was empty.

Very gently Marie laid the sleeping girl's head upon a blanket roll, and rose to come across to the silent grandfather. They talked for several minutes in Lakotah. When she stepped past him and left the tepee, his face was still set in the stoical calm of the Indian warrior of his generation, but his proud old eyes were glistening with gratitude and stern joy.

The sun had set, and the twilight was already fading. By the time Marie's slow step brought her up to the terrace, the valley and mountain slope were dusky with the shadow of approaching nightfall. Within the cabin Dupont had lit one of the mine candles. The candlestick was an empty whisky bottle. Another bottle, not yet empty, stood on the rough deal table between the two men.

"Hello, girlie!" sang out Vandervyn, as Marie paused in the open doorway. He sprang up to come around the table to her. "I've been languishing for you all afternoon. Would've chased down the hill, only your dad said you'd get on your ear if I did."

"Yes," quietly replied the girl. She had raised her hand to shield her face from the candle, as if the light dazzled her. As she spoke, she stepped in and along the side of the table opposite him, apparently not seeing him. "Yes, I would not have cared to see you. I was nursing one of the girls down in the camp."

Vandervyn stopped short. "It wasn't anything infectious, I hope."

"No. I shall not suffer from the same trouble. But I am very tired. I see you and Pere have eaten. You might finish the bottle outside."

"How about a kiss to sweeten the toddy?" he suggested.

She burst into a tantalizing little laugh. "I fear you must take yours straight for a while, Reggie. You are still engaged to your cousin, I believe— Good night, Pere."
